Why Boston Matters

Boston is a great city for lots of reasons, but first and foremost, it is extremely comfortable with itself. It is mature with many stories to tell. There is quite a history, but with some great things to come. A lot of cities aspire to be something different or like somewhere else, but Boston is just fine with the way it is. “Beantown” has great neighborhoods and so many outstanding universities. It feels like a big college town. Bostonians are opinionated and educated, which always makes for lively conversation at the pub, tavern or bookstore. This city is a collection of unique neighborhoods and, as usual, the best way to experience urban life is on foot. Great walks abound. The brownstones in Beacon Hill are timeless, the shops and restaurants on Newbury Street are wonderful, the North End is historic and quirky, the waterfront is fun and exciting, the panoramic skyline view from the Harvard Bridge is outstanding, the South End exemplifies gentrification and renewal, and the parks are some of the best in the country. The “Make Way for Ducklings” statue in the Public Garden is a must see. This was my favorite book as a child and it seemed so exciting that the ducks got to live in the bustling city. The “Big Dig” is complete and it was a huge infrastructure project that caused a mess, but the results were worth it. The Rose Kennedy Greenway is a great example of a new urban linear park and shows how you can take an old dysfunctional elevated highway and turn it into green space that is a public asset and urban jewel. In Cambridge, Kendall Square is the national model for an innovation district anchored by a leading university. The Fort Point District, with Seaport Square anchored by District Hall, is the up and coming tech/creative neighborhood. I think Boston is an appealing mix of the old and new, rooted in history but with an eye towards the future. This city is “always learning”. And, by the way, two final thoughts - baseball at Fenway and lobster rolls at Neptune Oyster or B & G Oysters. Perfect.
